Redirecting the Department Focus

The beginnings of Agricultural Engineering as a profession and the beginning of what became the Department of Agricultural Engineering are outlined in Volume I of this history.

From the 1970s until 1990 few changes occurred in the academic Agricultural Engineering Program. There were courses that focused on machinery, structures, soil and water, processing, and food. Students, by selecting electives developed strength in one or more of these areas. In 1990 the engineering academic program was divided into two Options; the General (or Agricultural Engineering) Option and the Food Engineering Option. Students entering the major were required to select one of these two options and the course work required for each option differed so that students in each of the two options developed strengths appropriate to the selected option.

Emergence of Biological Engineering

Students in the Agricultural Engineering program always understood that Agricultural Engineers appreciated the biological concepts related to the engineering principles being taught. In a few cases, namely North Carolina State University in 1965, Mississippi State University in 1967, and University of Guelph in 1969, the program and/or department name was changed to include some version of the word "biology". All other agricultural engineering programs and departments considered biology to be an unnamed, implicit (but important) part of the curriculum.

In the early 1990s, under the National leadership of pioneers such as ASAE President Carl Hall, ASEE members Denny Davis and Art Johnson, and University of California faculty member Roger Garrett, a US Department of Agriculture project developed a series of workshops with the focus of creating and lending credence to a Biological Engineering curriculum. Simultaneous with these efforts, there was a decline in the numbers of students seeking degrees in Agricultural Engineering. These two factors led to the emergence of the Biological Engineering effort. New names were given to the subdivisions of the Ag E curriculum including Biotechnical Engineering, Bioenvironmental Controls, Machine Systems Engineering, Bioprocess Systems Engineering, Natural Resources Engineering, and Food Engineering. Lastly, course outlines were developed for a suite of new courses that were considered necessary for Biological Engineers to have completed.

As a result of this effort at the National level, with leadership provided by ASAE, Agricultural Engineering Departments across the nation began to consider if and how they would be a part of this new Biological Engineering movement. At Penn State the faculty took the first step towards Biological Engineering by changing the Department's name to Agricultural and Biological Engineering in November of 1990. In March of 1994, the name of the graduate program was changed to Agricultural and Biological Engineering and in March 1996 the name of the undergraduate Agricultural Engineering (Ag E) program was changed to Agricultural and Biological Engineering (ABE). In January 2008, the name of the undergraduate Agricultural and Biological Engineering (ABE) program was again changed to Biological Engineering (BE). The last change to date was in August 2010 when the Biological Engineering program added a third option to the program giving students in the Biological Engineering program the option of choosing either the “Agricultural Engineering”, the “Food and Biological Process Engineering”, or the “Natural Resource Engineering” Option.

With the emergence of Biological Engineering, several Departmental courses were changed and new courses in Biological Systems and Engineering Elements of Biochemistry and Microbiology were added to the curriculum along with appropriate senior-level design courses. The graduates from the engineering program are listed in Appendix 3.

College of Agricultural Sciences Changes and Changes within the Agricultural and Biological Engineering Department

July 1, 2012 – The College of Agricultural Sciences restructured thus reducing the number of academic departments from 12 to 9. The Department of Agricultural and Biological Engineering was not affected greatly. However, four faculty members who work in the wood products area moved from the School of Forest Resources (renamed Ecosystems Science and Management, ESM) to Agricultural and Biological Engineering.

These four faculty members are:

Nicole Brown, Associate Professor

John Janowiak, Professor

Paul Smith, Professor

Judd Michael, Professor (maintaining a joint appointment between ABE and ESM)

Agricultural Mechanization

Begun in the early 1960s, the Agricultural Mechanization program was a College of Agricultural Sciences undergraduate program designed for students who wished to develop strength in three major areas; (1) basic sciences of mathematics, physics, chemistry and biology, (2) engineering technology with courses in machine systems, building environments, natural resources, food technology, and processing, and (3) business. Since its inception this program has developed graduates with special abilities to work in all areas of the agricultural industry. Over the years a large majority of these graduates have found employment in the machinery industry, but many have been successful in other areas of agriculture.

After Dave Beppler's retirement in 1986, James Hilton assumed the leadership role of the Agricultural Mechanization program. Around 2000 Jim relinquished this responsibility to Dennis Buckmaster, who provided leadership until 2006 when he left Penn State. For about two years Paul Heinemann provided leadership to this program until Jude Liu assumed this role in 2010.

Over the years, mostly in response to political pressures, the Agricultural Mechanization (Ag M) program has evolved primarily in name only. In November of 1990, the name was changed to Agricultural Systems Management and Technology (ASMT). In March 1994, the term "Technology" was dropped and what started as the Ag M program in the early 1960s became the Agricultural Systems Management (ASM) program. As the program took on these various names, the content and intent of the program remained primarily the same as described above.

This program has provided many students with viable agriculturally based educations that have served them well throughout their careers. Those who have graduated from these programs are listed in Appendix 4.

Communication and Leadership

In about 1999, Joseph Irudayaraj and James Hilton wrote a USDA project that argued that graduates from the Agricultural and Biological Engineering Department needed enhanced instruction in communication and leadership. The funding of this project resulted in the creation of two new courses, both required of all graduates from both the Agricultural and Biological Engineering (ABE now BE) and Agricultural Systems Management (ASM) programs. These two courses, taught from their inception by Ronald Johnson from the Smeal College of Business, emerged in 2006 after a decade of changes into the courses we have today. The first course, BE/ASM 391 Contextual Integration of Communication Skills for the Technical Workplace is a 2-credit course taught during Spring Semester of the junior year. The second course, BE/ASM 392 Contextual Integration of Leadership Skills for the Technical Workplace is a 2-credit course taught during the fall semester of the senior year. These two 2-credit courses replaced a required 3-credit Technical Writing course (ENGL 303) and a 1-credit Senior Seminar (ABE 490). These courses have been well received by the students and have been highly endorsed by the agencies and companies who have hired our graduates.

Turfgrass and Agricultural Equipment (TAE) Service Technician Certification Program

The Turfgrass and Agricultural Equipment Service Technician Certificate Program developed as a result of industry connections of James W. Hilton in 2003. A shortage of skilled technicians to maintain golf course equipment, as well as the contemporary agricultural tractors and machinery, gave further impetus for the program to be commenced. As a result of industry input, the two-year certificate program was formalized with four intensive 8-week sessions plus an internship requirement. Curriculum offerings included: engines, hydraulics, power transfer, electronics, electro-hydraulics, hydrostatics, irrigation, turf reel mowers and reel grinding, welding, metal fabrication, shop management, agronomy, business concepts/applications, personnel management, and diagnostics and troubleshooting.

Student successes have included employment at major golf clubs, smaller golf facilities, agricultural equipment dealerships, equipment rental facilities, irrigation design firms, farming, municipal grounds programs, and landscaping firms.

With faculty re-assignments, research, and retirements plus Department renovations and re-focus, the program ended in March 2011. Thirty-five quality technical-minded individuals had been mentored toward their entry into the field of turfgrass and agricultural equipment service.

Faculty who developed and taught the TAE program are:

Dr. James W. Hilton, Program Director, 2003-2011
Dr. Doug Schaufler, Instructor, 2003-2009
Dr. Aaron Yoder, Instructor, 2003-2009
William C. Harshman, Assistant Program Director and Instructor, 2003-2011
Jeff Downing, Instructor, 2009-2010
Bob Wrye, Instructor, 2009-2010

Penn State Omicron Chapter of Alpha Epsilon Honor Society for students in Agricultural Engineering and related engineering programs

The National Organization of Alpha Epsilon was founded in 1959 at the University of Missouri. Alpha Epsilon Honor Society's main objectives are: 1) to promote the noble ideals of the engineering profession, 2) give recognition to those agricultural and biological engineers who manifest worthy qualities of character, scholarship, and professional attainment, and 3) to encourage and support improvements in the Agricultural and Biological Engineering profession.

The Penn State Omicron Chapter was chartered in 1969 and seeks to honor students in agricultural engineering and related engineering programs, who are duly registered in the engineering curriculum. The selection of members is based on excellent engineering ability, scholarship, character, and leadership.

- Juniors who have a cumulative scholastic rank in the upper quarter of their class in the College of Engineering may be elected for membership after the first month of their junior year.
- Seniors who have a cumulative scholastic rank in the upper third of their class in the College of Engineering may be elected for membership after the first month of their senior year.
- Graduate students who have a cumulative grade point average of 3.25 or higher may be elected for membership after the completion of at least 7 course credits.
- Engineers and scientists who have made important contributions to the Department of Agricultural and Biological Engineering or to the Agricultural and Biological Engineering profession may be inducted into Alpha Epsilon as honorary members.

The Penn State students who have been initiated into the Omicron Chapter are listed in Appendix 9.
